Held's jewel box, extracted the jewels—$150,000 worth—and took the next train back to New York as soon as he reached Cleveland. This was a jewel robbery which really worked. Not even Miss Held was in the secret, and she spent many hours of anguish. It was first announced that the entire week at Cleveland had been cancelled, but later given out that Miss Held would try to appear. With a mob storming the theatre on the opening night, it was 8:10 o'clock before Miss Held permitted the doors to be opened. On her first entrance she was given an ovation for her bravery. The robbery was genuine, but the robbery was not.

Flora Zabelle (Mrs. Raymond Hitchcock) received pages of advertising on the strength of the mere announcement that she had gone on the stage to make enough money to save her father, an indigent Armenian, from the wrath of the Turks; Trixie Fitzgerald led a delegation to Mayor McClellan's office to demand woman's rights, while a group of chorus men waited outside City Hall to throw eggs at her; Marie Walsh, a chorus girl in "Watch Your Step," got her picture in countless papers because her press agent announced that a man from Ecuador, who never existed, wanted to put her likeness on the new $10,000 Ecuadorian notes. And so it goes.

Possibly the best example of the craze for publicity, and the ease with which it is achieved, is to be found in the case of an obscure waiter at Sam Martin's old restaurant—since removed—on Broadway, between Fortieth and Forty-first streets. This waiter had been there for years, and was intimately acquainted with many well known sporting and theatrical men who patronized it. Word came to Walter Kingsley one night that this man was dying and wanted to see him. Kingsley hastened to his side. It was the waiter's dying request that Kingsley get him a good story in the papers when he died. "I'll try," promised Kingsley, anxious to comfort him, "but I'm not sure that it can be done."

"Well, all the rest of them get it—every one around here."

"Yes; I know. But they are all well known men—men who have done things. Now, what have you done?"

"Nothing."

"Been a waiter all your life?"

"Look here, now!" Kingsley levelled a finger at him. "Didn't you invent the fried egg sandwich?"

"Yes."

And a great glow of happiness suffused him, because he knew that the inventor of the fried egg sandwich would be worth a good story in the papers. And he was.

Anniversary
Sales

Second week of the Birthday Celebration of The Store Accommodating begins tomorrow.

Second week offerings—like second thoughts—are in many instances better than the first; as today's advertisement will show.

For some of the shipments, specially planned to reach us before the Sale began, were late in arriving and are now ready for tomorrow's selling.

So you can expect a week of very interesting and important happenings, of which you will be given due notice.

But be sure to start the week well by coming tomorrow to get some of the good things we tell about here.

Some one truly said the other day that there is "a certain noblesse oblige in business inherited from past traditions," and that "we paraphrase" "you can trust the behaviour of a fine old store just as you can take the word of a gentleman."

We like to apply this to the Store Accommodating at this appropriate time for retrospection.

Three generations in this business have labored in this Store's development since its beginning in 1865.

It has developed along consistent lines—broad-mindedness, fair dealing, reliability, progressiveness.

Upon all these facts the people of Brooklyn and its surroundings have come to rely implicitly.

We consider the

Public Faith in This Store

the finest asset that it has secured for itself during the fifty-two years it has been in business.

SHADOWS ON THE SCREENS

"POLLY REDHEAD," a Bluebird photoplay, with Ella Hall in the title role, will be the feature at the Rialto this week. The role which Miss Hall will play is one of the double exposure kind. The idea is not new, but the way in which it is done in "Polly Redhead" is said to be quite different. Charlie Chaplin in "Easy Street" will be seen as a pestered policeman who patrols a beat in a tough neighborhood.

E. Alexander Powell will continue his war talks, accompanied by the motion pictures from the zone described. Henry Miller, well known as a baritone ballad singer, will be the principal soloist. He will sing Clark's "Tally Ho."

At the Strand Theatre Susane Hayakawa, the Japanese actor, will be seen in a new photo drama, "Each to His Kind," which was written for him by Paul West. In this production Mr. Hayakawa plays an East Indian, the son of the Maharajah. In the supporting cast are Tsuru Aoki, Voia Vale, Ernest Joy, Eugene Pallette, Walter Long and others.

Valencia Suratt will appear at the Academy for the first four days of the week in "The New York Peacock." Miss Suratt's publicity man says that all of her previous gorgeousness will pale before the splendor of her new costume in her new play. Some of the things which she will wear are a hat called a "character hat" and bobbed hair. Valencia is a vampire. Harry Hillard is her victim.

"Brighten Thy Daughter" will begin its second week at the Park Theatre to-day. The performance is continuous, from 2:50 to 11 o'clock.

Mme. Olga Petrova in "Bridges Burned," a play written by herself, will be the feature at Loew's New York Theatre and Roof to-day. Charlie Chaplin will be an added attraction on Monday and Tuesday. The features of the week will include "The Image Maker," with Valkyrie, on Monday; "Wildfire Lucas," in "Jim Bludon" on Tuesday; "The Reward of the Faithless," on Wednesday; Frank Keenan, in "The Cad," on Thursday; Gail Kane, in "The Red Woman," on Friday, and Gladys Coburn, in "The Primitive Call," on Saturday.

"Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea" will continue at the Broadway Theatre. Rumor hath it that $20,000 worth of business is a fair estimate for the last two weeks.

"Love the Woman," with Geraldine

Farrar in the title role, will continue at the Forty-fourth Street Theatre.

"A Daughter of the Gods" will enter on its final week at the Lyric Theatre to-day.

Max Linder says that he has found something in Chicago which is much more terrifying than life in the trenches. Mr. Linder went out on a sightseeing expedition and inadvertently got caught in a department store bargain sale.

Doris Kenyon, star of "The Ocean Waif," will be seen in "On Trial," in which she will star with Henry B. Walthall.

Marie Doro has come East to work in the studios of the Famous Players right here in New York, leaving behind her a new bungalow and a new husband in California. The letter which called Miss Doro East said nothing of an Elliott Dexter, so the little star abandoned her newly acquired domesticity and journey to the metropolis—temporarily, she says.

To C. I. C. A. R. and others—It is being brought to the attention of H. U. that her Italian is not up to the standard. A. C. Cavanaugh, of the sporting department, furnished the phrase "Io portore voi grande soldi," and now his alibi is that he supposed H. U. wanted a literal translation of Joe the iceman's English. At any rate, H. U. is glad now that Joe used his broken English instead of her broken Italian, for, had he used her suggested phrase, C. I. C. A. says that his mother would have thought he had gone suddenly insane.

Earl Williams will be starred in the coming production of "The Hawk," the drama in which William Faversham appeared. In support of Mr. Williams will be Ethel Gray Terry, Julia Swayze Gordon, Katherine Lewin, Denton Vane and Mario Majeroni. Paul Scorden will direct the production.

B. S. Moore's latest and most ambitious screen contribution, "In the Hands of the Law," will be released next month, with Lois Meredith in the stellar role.

Extract from the Goldwyn press sheet:

"Vernon Steel, the handsome young English actor, who has been chosen as Mae Marsh's leading man, is expected to win quick popularity on the screen. He is well known in America as leading man for Billie Burke in 'Love Watches.'"

"When the time came to christen the camera used in making the first picture, by breaking a bottle of champagne over the tripod, only the bottle remained. No case of inability in the studio, however, gave indication of what had become of the champagne."

Two hundred applicants from Manhattan and fifty from Brooklyn have already been received for the contest to select "Miss Preparedness" for the series of motion pictures to be issued by the Universal Film Company. "Miss Preparedness" will be selected in Madison Square Garden at the Industrial Preparedness Conference, to be held February 8 to 9. Among the contestants are Marjorie Sterrett, of battleship fame; Dorothy Davis, Lucille Everson, Catharine Devine, Evelyn Kent and Giannina Fiore.

Douglas Fairbanks has been the guest of honor at so many dinners lately that he says he is developing Charley horse, or whatever it is that athletes get when they climb the sides of buildings too frequently. When Douglas was entertained by the Brooklyn Press Club recently he was called upon to make a speech. He said: "I have worked in the silent drama for so long that I'd rather climb the side of your clubhouse than take him at his word, and now he has to do it everywhere."

caused them to be carted in the general direction of Manhattan. The driver, when he reached what he considered to be the middle of Brooklyn Bridge, was to have trouble with the lath on the crate and accidentally release the monkeys. Up, down and around the rigging they swarmed, and out came the police reserves to chase them. It was a good story.

Channing Pollock, back in the days when he worked for the Shuberts, persuaded an old woman to station herself in front of the Lyric Theatre box office the night before the seat sale for Mme. Bernhardt opened. It was her story that she had played with Bernhardt years before in Paris, and that she simply had to buy the first ticket so as to be sure of a seat.

The Anna Held milk bath story originated in Pittsburgh, when Miss Held was making her first American appearance with Evans and Hoy in "A Parlor Match." Florenz Ziegfeld is generally credited with this yarn. Some years later, when Miss Held was starring in one of her innumerable musical shows, Mr. Ziegfeld engineered the greatest stage jewel robbery of the age. On a train en route to Cleveland he broke open Miss
